

Status of State Parks During COVID-19

Several states are taking measures to reopen this month as the COVID-19 curve appears to be flattening in much of the country due to strict physical distancing during the past six weeks. In response, state parks are reopening and relaxing restrictions for visitors.

Almost all accessible parks have limitations. “Limitations” certainly has a broad range of interpretations. For some parks it means that all offices and services are closed for the time being. For most, campgrounds and overnight activities are closed. Some are fully functional at some locations, while parks with high volume remain off limits. For those who were completely shut down until April 30, it often means that many trails and parks are still closed.

A few park systems, such as Delaware, have taken a different approach by keeping their parks completely open (or with very minimal limitations). Delaware is even waiving entrance fees to encourage outdoor recreation.
